This shocking new preprint shows without doubt that of the excess deaths reported in a single week, for every 2 covid19 deaths, there was an additional non-covid19 death in Scotland and England & Wales. In the Netherlands, it's even worse: 1 covid19 death accompanied by 1 non-...

...covid19 surplus death. Given the analysis draws on multiple years data, this difference is unlikely to be chance. The excess non-covid19 are most likely heavily contributed to by untreated acute cancer & cardiovascular disease, whose numbers coming into A&E have collapsed 50%.

Until we lift lockdown, I much doubt the fear based calculus preventing some non-covid19 acutely ill people from seeking medical help will change. It's estimated that 14,000 avoidable non-covid deaths in E&W have occurred, rising 2000 per week. Those who don't want any changes...

What I find most remarkable is the near-nested shape of the plots, in countries which are nominally following different measures. There's a reason for that.

So, as you suggest, we have an infections rate of somewhere between 1&3Million people, why are you under the assumption we are approaching herd immunity when the CSO said we needed 60% of the population to achieve herd immunity?

There is no evidence our demographics will make schools a trigger for outbreak when they are not elsewhere. Stockholm is a very big city & most of the Swedish data reflect that density. Density is not as important as some say, affecting perhaps rate but not extent of infections.

No, let me be clear. An infection fatality rate of 0.2% means to get 32,000 covid19 deaths, 16,000,000 covid19 infected people are required. That's a chunk of the population. This other 1/3rd pop having some kind of immunity is genuine: if interested I can supply the paper.

Yes, we don't shut schools or countries over 'flu which, despite vaccination, still kills a variable number of up to 40k people per year. Formal estimates of the infection fatality ratio are coalescing on a value similar to a nasty flu season.

IFR estimates which are higher are more likely to be an overestimate than low numbers are likely to be an underestimate. While we are conservative (inclusive) in determining Covid19 deaths, we underestimate incidence, as many have zero symptoms.

No, neither cars nor roads are close to "as safe as they can be". We have set the compromise position where it is. It's in a very different place than it was in 1960. We could save a thousand lives & 10k life-changing injuries per year by reducing speed limit further.

Got as far as reason one. Laughed and closed the link. What science doesn't support them? Because every stage has followed the opinions of scientists at the very forefront of this field globally.

I will leave you in peace. Luckily, you're not doing the deciding. But pls remember, when we finally see what we've done, please acknowledge a polite scientist trying to get others to see beyond modelling, which based on weak assumptions & incorrect data, has led to a disaster.

I'm not a crank. I've been a professional PhD scientist in new drug R&D for 32y. I assure you, I have felt great discomfort with the slowly dawning realisation that we could hardly have made things worse in U.K. if we'd tried. I do not blame scientists, but politicians, solely.

That's fair. Viruses are weird & unlike anything else. They're widely considered non-living.
Viruses definitely infect numerous organisms, hijack replication machinery, kill host cells whereupon shed in huge numbers. If transferred to a naive host, they often in turn grow there.

As an "armchair expert" I would want any second wave to be happening now, so that we have the benefit of the better weather to fight a virus. Whether that has any scientific basis for this virus is still unknown but we are basing most of our strategy on past experience.

I agree. Good news is, if a 2nd wave is to happen, it's most likely to happen over summer.
I'm interested to learn whether the weekly all-causes mortality numbers fall below trend. I hypothesise this because those elderly who died of covid19 will now be missing from those stats.

Yes, exactly, IF the infection fatality rate is 0.2% (1 in 500). I'm currently using that number because it's the mean of dozens of independently estimated IFRs in numerous countries, incl Germany, Denmark, Sweden, multiple USA, etc etc.

IFR estimates which are higher are more likely to be an overestimate than low numbers are likely to be an underestimate. While we are conservative (inclusive) in determining Covid19 deaths, we underestimate incidence, as many have zero symptoms.

I know, I've read quite a bit about that terrible time. I included it solely because, despite all those additional problems back then, few of which the world has in 2020, that multi wave 'flu pandemic still 'only' infected 1/3rd of the pop.

As an "armchair expert" I would want any second wave to be happening now, so that we have the benefit of the better weather to fight a virus. Whether that has any scientific basis for this virus is still unknown but we are basing most of our strategy on past experience.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · May 12
I agree. Good news is, if a 2nd wave is to happen, it's most likely to happen over summer.
I'm interested to learn whether the weekly all-causes mortality numbers fall below trend. I hypothesise this because those elderly who died of covid19 will now be missing from those stats.

Sounds to me like the Govt is ignoring or taking out menbers of SAGE who dont agree with eugenics policy

Im sure co-incidence that they threw Prof Furgison under a bus the day we topped Italy's death toll; and the same week Borris is ending quarantine against scientific advice.

The media could not be played.

"Scientific advice" from SAGE never mandated or even recommended "lockdown", quarantining at borders, border closure. It would have been tricky, given there's insufficient empirical evidence of efficacy.

According to published stats, there are just over 500K teachers in U.K. & a total workforce of around 32M. So teachers are around 1.6%. As 32K have died with covid19, I calculate 510 teacher deaths would be pro rata. I'm guessing that teachers are on average younger than...

Just for statistical analysis, not to diminish the effect of any death, anywhere:
33,000 deaths out of the the U.K. pop. of 67.9m is 0.0486%
160 deaths in the NHS's roughly 423k medics is 0.0378%
47 deaths out of roughly 500k teachers is 0.0094%

Teachers fare better than most.

EuroMOMO shows weekly death rates, which have not only fallen to pre-Covid19 in many countries but, in France, they're running obv lower than typical. That's because you can't die twice and, now that most of the vulnerable are dead, the natural mortality rate is now reduced.

If the Infection Fatality Rate is around 0.2% of cases and there have been 5,500 deaths then the number infected will be close to 3million Londoners or 30% plus of the population.

I was looking to say something like "as if that suggests moving away from 'the strictures of the unions'" but I can't argue that. Voting con is definitely anti-Union.

I agree with the nobility and value of donating organs (which I support). I agree that it's easy to opt out. However, I disagree with the principle of automatic "conscription" of one's body or its constituent parts.

I accept your view is entirely honourable & cannot be dismissed. However, that was not the view of the House. They weighed up the real issues on either side & we are currently where we are. Another Act can definitely change the law again.

Keir Starmer has now requested Boris Johnson return to the "House of Commons and correct the record".

A humiliating inevitable beating in 3 parts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS
LONDON SW1A 0AA

13 May 2020

Dear Prime Minister

In the House of Commons earlier today, I said:

"[on] 12 May in the Government's own official advice was - and I'm quoting from it

'It remains very unlikely that people receiving care in a care home will become infected.'"

In your response you said:

"No, Mr Speaker, it wasn't true that the advice said that and in reality we brought the lockdown to care homes ahead of the general lockdown."

The advice I was referring to was published on 25 February 2020. It states:

"... It is therefore very unlikely that anyone receiving care in a care home or the community will become infected ..."

At this time of national crisis, it is more important than ever that Government ministers are accurate in the information they give. Given this, I expect you to come to the House of Commons at the earliest opportunity to correct the record and to apologise that this was official Government guidance regarding care homes.

I am copying this letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Yours sincerely

Keir Starmer
Leader of the Labour Party

It would not run riot, listen to mr witty today at PMs press conference - the deaths rate of the virus is very small and most people will not get it at all - I was incredibly surprised he said that. The chief medical officer saying the opposite of what he was saying few weeks ago

It turns out that most people didn't get Spanish 'flu. Probably a third max of the worlds pop did get it. This virus is very much less lethal than that infamous 'flu, between 1:1000 & 1:500. I wish BBC would correct it's 3.4% number which was never correct.

I know, I've read quite a bit about that terrible time. I included it solely because, despite all those additional problems back then, few of which the world has in 2020, that multi wave 'flu pandemic still 'only' infected 1/3rd of the pop.

Would Public or State schools have higher or lower virus transmission rates. So would this be diversity or inequality, would public school pupils. Be tested continually, and State schools not. Therefore diversity or inequality?

Been saying this here for weeks. Based on reading the data, pre-prints of research papers & commentary by top experts like Prof Giesecke.
Anyone who STILL maintains that "it's lockdown that prevented us having 500,000 deaths & you're a Nazi" might give their heads a wobble.

> Alistair Haimes @AlistairHaimes
> Prof Giesecke: "A hard lockdown does not protect old and frail people living in care homes - a population the lockdown was designed to protect"

Keep with me. And if lockdown didn't prevent deaths (many, perhaps most of which are in care homes), then we should not have had it and STILL have it. Lockdown has broken the economy 2x worse than the Financial Crisis AND led to 12K avoidable deaths. Most of this is on Ferguson.

I'm not sure I will believe any large scale public health statements ever again, and I'm the sort of person who should, as I'm qualified to follow & "check their working". Even if Ferguson is never used again, I've learned we've no method for assessing how good our experts are.

Govt can effectively reopen the economy by saying it is no longer warranted to pay furlough salaries. Not yet, but very soon, once the covid19 death rate is sufficiently low that it's not distinguished from other risks routinely accepted. There's no 'zero risk' state.

Mandating makes tricky prob worse.

   The reality is that black people and Muslim immigrants are committing crimes at dramatically higher rates than any other group of people. And everyone knows it. No amount of obfuscation, whataboutism, or other assorted political games will make this not so.

   That may or may not be so. Quite a separate matter whether these individuals are different genetically. Those who don't like immigrants, especially coloured people, enjoy placing them in boxes marked "inferior", an attitude that revolts me.

Ah, ok. Easily done :)
I was aware she'd "apologised" about that.
Perhaps she believes the raised children should indeed remain silent? In which case no apology is likely.

Her intention to "keep covid19 out of NZ" is impossible. Unless NZ intends to adopt a NK style lockdown forever, in due course it will run through her country. Personally I much doubt there'll ever be a vaccine. Her actions may not look at all wise in the future.

In that scenario, even if what you claim about antibodies is true, the existence of antibodies would be a marker for having had adaptive immune response, which (under your set of assumptions) means it's an indicator they cleared the virus with t cells. So no practical difference

Mortality rate from this virus is 0.1-0.2%, or 1 in 1000 to 1 in 500. This is a whole population value. If you're older & ill it's worse odds. If you're young & well, you're at less risk than the risks of sudden death before the virus. Only 35 people younger than 30 have died.

I agree with the nobility and value of donating organs (which I support). I agree that it's easy to opt out. However, I disagree with the principle of automatic "conscription" of one's body or its constituent parts.

Today's release of @NHSEngland #Covid_19 deaths stats includes analysis of pre-existing conditions.

Fully a quarter of those dying are diabetic, and a fifth have dementia; around 1/7th have chronic lung and/or kidney disease.

(Unlike in Italy, hypertension is not disclosed.)

Much of the burden of disease occurs later in life. I'm wondering if the disease burden at death distinct for covid19 deaths as from other causes of death? Deaths triggered by 'flu might show a similar pattern. I'm encouraged by the low % of those under 40 who have died.

Don't have the links now, but estimates for Spain and France out this week are not good, showing around 5%.
Also, removing furlough can force people back to work as e.g. a waitress, but it's not going to force ppl to start going to restaurants, and that end is also needed.

Crikey, that's truly terrible if only 5% in France. Oddly enough, there are some other locations with much larger values. We probably need more data. But darn sobering if solid & confirmed. Thanks. Do you have a link? I will look later also.

There is no evidence our demographics will make schools a trigger for outbreak when they are not elsewhere. Stockholm is a very big city & most of the Swedish data reflect that density. Density is not as important as some say, affecting perhaps rate but not extent of infections.

He's already been shown this by me, but continues with this silly suggestion that children can't spread it.

Until the R rate is definitely low we can't risk it.

That is to say the Swedish Gov approach is to accept that covid-19 is endemic and now it's just counted as a normal death. In 10 years time the average death counts will just show that in 2020 the average changed from somewhere around 1700 per day (UK), to 2500

Please note that, unless you have a plausible alternative, the fall in implied R seen everywhere inresults solely from emergence of developing herd immunity. I would expect that it's in countries which warded off the virus will host further outbreaks & deaths from this virus.

Teachers have been working none stop since lockdown & schools have been open to vulnerable & frontline staff throughout so I think it's safe to say they're 'mucking in'. The class sizes will be up to 15 in a class. Keeping up to 15 4 year olds 1.5-2m apart is near impossible.

It is not necessary to 'socially distance' kids, on the contrary, they will rapidly gain whatever immunity infection confers. Thereafter they will not be vectors and, like all prior infected cases, reduce transmission. This is how all pandemics end.

Because we're not Sweden! Their av class size is 19, classrooms are bigger with much more opps for outdoor learning. They also don't typically start school until 6. The rationale between socially distancing chn is because of who they may pass the virus onto.

The sooner all the kids have had it & recovered the faster they will cease being vectors, 2-4 weeks tops & the issue goes away for good. You can't outrun a pandemic.

You'll find any excuse not to accept that this virus represents to schoolchildren a far smaller risk than they run every year from other infections diseases which kill them. Why, I've no idea.

The average state primary school has nearly treble this number of pupils.

The average secondary? Nearly ten times as many.

Schools can't keep a handle on kids catching head lice..and anyone with a child in school knows how quickly norovirus spreads.... it's ridiculous to think about reopening schools. Elton are staying closed until September .... what's so different ? I wonder.

We appear to have utterly lost perspective. We also seem unable to speak to senior policy makers in Sweden & Denmark to learn from them. Ignorant people have decided that, "because they're Swedish", nothing whatsoever learned there could possibly apply in U.K., because blurgh.

Its been calculated by people who run emergency cancer interventions & lifesaving heart treatments that over 10,000 of their patients didn't get to hospital. They are now dead or beyond rescue (non-Covid19) & on average younger than virus deaths. That number grows 2000 per week.

620,000 people die yearly in this country? So the expected deaths so far would be around 284,000. I doubt that more than 10% of those deaths are directly attributable to the virus, mostly in the over 70s & 80s. Regain perspective.

I completely agree. I was in support of lockdowns as a strategy when we did not know how dangerous #COVID19 was. But the data has long been in that the models were orders of magnitude off, and it's far less dangerous than thought. Yet people are unable to admit it was wrong.

I agree exactly. The more data come in, the more shockingly ordinary the virus appears. It is serious & lethal, but only in the same way as influenza A is in a bad year. Both kill and estimated 1:1000 to 1:500 infected people (assuming a demographically mixed pop).

There is no case at all for vaccinating the bulk of the population. No medicine is free of risk liability. Ethically, benefits far outweigh risks. That is implausible here because 90%+ of the population are not at risk & therefore are not in need of a vaccine, developed quickly.

Right, but even influenza seems to be less discriminatory, killing a higher proportion of healthy/young & fewer old/ill.

So we can actually target quarantining far more effectively w/ #COVID__19 by protecting known risk groups. And allow low risk groups to develop herd immunity.

"800 deaths related to aircraft accidents" in that week. Assume there were 7 x 1700 other deaths that week. 800/(11900+800) gives 6.3% of deaths from aircraft accidents. However, over a year, given they're rare, we might expect to see 800/620,000 or around 0.1% air accidents.

Which would be more accurate to use on Twitter? The 0.1% as showing risks across a year, or 6.3%, valid for only one week in history?
Your 39% is of the latter kind.

It won't be necessary to raise a petition to run a definitive clinical trial of the agent. Only if it is proven safe & effective does the question of how to fund full development arise. Academics run small clinical trials routinely. This is my area of work for last 30+ years.

There has been a lot of discussion of the Swedish approach to coping with the #COVID19 pandemic, and of whether their strategy of more voluntary restrictions and a more rapid approach to reaching 'herd immunity' would work. Let's talk about the results so far. 1/

Sadly they removed all laws that could prosecute them.

If this is the standard, I'm not sure that the leaders of any democracy could remain out of jail. All of them, even the NZ PM, have made choices which have already or will soon have fatal consequences for some.

Good spot by James, here. I can see the statistical bumps in EUROMOMO.
IIRC, not a single Tweeter called for lockdown, which is odd, as that epidemic killed several handful of kids & babies, which mercifully Covid19 spares.

This is hysterical! This isn't a sensible bill it's a smoke screen for the fact we already have/had full control over immigration but the UK government chose NOT to enforce it. Literally written into law Already. This is racism dressed up as immigration control.

If a citizen of the EU27 turned up at our border then, unless they're a serious criminal, the "control" we had was that we were obligated to admit them. That kind of "control?".

Good to see hard numbers from a trusted source. In my view, it would bookend the message of what's really happening by summarising the number of deaths in the age categories, 0-9, 10-19, etc.The level of concern about schoolchildren is markedly out of proportion to the risks.

Actually, yes they are. All studies show that an influx of low skilled workers reduces wages at the lower end. FOM, ironically, slightly increases salaries for the well paid. As such it's a 'minor' effect on average.

I actually studied the subject matter, how about you try that?

Preparing the invoice was a political act by someone in the civil service. The G was in all likelihood sent a copying anonymously.
This bill was never appropriate. If it was, we'd hear about cases every other week. An army vet who's now an MP is on the case & rightly reassuring.

Agreed. I believe there have been findings like this before. For example, patients are assumed to be potentially infectious until swan tests are negative. The effect has been that for several days after the healthy person has fought off an infection, PCR can be false positive.

People who test positive for the novel coronavirus after making a full recovery do not transmit the disease to others

The virus was not detected in culture tests of samples that tested positive in PCR tests

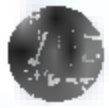
Relapsed patients are not infectious laboratory testing of re-positive cases and their contacts, no evidence was found that indicated infectivity of re-positive cases



- Of the 447 re-positive cases as of 15 May, epidemiological investigation was conducted on 285 cases and laboratory analysis on 108 cases (*473 as of 19 May)
- From monitoring of 790 contacts of the 285 re-positive cases, no case was found that was newly infected solely from contact with re-positive cases cases all had negative results. Basic analysis of 93 of the cases found the following results:

- From testing for 8 respiratory viruses, another respiratory virus was detected in 3 of the cases.
- The Ct values in real-time RT-PCR during re-positive period is found to be above 30 at 89.5%.

So the lesson appears to be that the "re-positive" people aren't reinfected, just like experienced immunologists expected; instead, the PCR tests are false positive.

Does wearing a face covering mean you don't have to practice social distancing? The answer is no. Wearing a cloth face covering while in public AND maintaining 6 ft of distance from other people are two actions to help stop the spread of #COVID19. bit.ly/2Ravt42

It was simple to create an analytical framework which would give the result sought. Restrict the entry dates, favouring early movers (who were highly qualified) and exclude much higher numbers of low skilled migrants from A8. Cut-off date set to ignore later life costs. Job done.

Regarding non-EU migrants, agreed. Regarding EU citizens, we have no power to do other than allow them in. Only in special circs can we exclude. Only in other circs can we later invite them to leave. That latter does not constitute control: if no rules are broken, they can stay.

There is no long run for brexit.

Since 2016, gdp per capita has fallen to a point where it is now closer to Puerto Rico than to Holland.

But the people funding brexit and the party stay rich and get richer regardless. So there's no motivation to better the country.

Regardless of the size ranking of U.K's economy, it's purchasing power per person that's a far better correlate of material well-being. However, raw GDP/head is obviously bent. Ireland is 4th. Believe that & there's more where that came from, like Holland's ranking.

In conclusion, intolerably heavy duty lockdown has almost no effect on transmission. Clearly, transmission continues for as long as any tested lockdown lasted. All that sacrifice in non-covid19 lives as well as the economy. Wasted.

It is clear that Sir David has utterly failed to consult widely with experienced epidemiologists. Mainstream scientists & medics who are immersed in the emerging subject matter favour swift lifting before we needlessly assist in the deaths of thousands more non covid patients.

Obviously what Cummins and his wife did was far worse than what Ferguson did. The Cummins couple knew they were infectious; Ferguson had recovered and probably had some temporary immunity.

For reasons we don't yet fully understand, child to adult CV19 transmission has not been unequivocally demonstrated. Proof of negatives is near impossible. But low risk is fair.

It wasn't an absolute prohibition. It was advice. My guess is Cummings was up to speed on the limited science which indicates still that child to adult transmission is on balance a lower likelihood (though obv potentially higher impact). Talked to his parents & they OK'd it.

It's a serious Qu. Workforce is large, duration is many weeks. Actuarily, I believe I've read an analysis showing that there have been fewer deaths than expected. Certainly the closer to severe patients, the lower the HCW death rate.

They're at lower risk of serious illness & death than from seasonal flu, which mostly kills geriatrics, but also younger adults & especially children. Few individuals, but notable yearly. Almost absent with covid19. I suggest vulnerable staff shield on full pay. All others, fine.

It has been calculated that the death rate in teaching staff was not elevated compared with the general population. Teaching is not throwing up an additional risk factor. Most people don't know how many ordinarily die in a year. It's about 1% of pop, so 620,000 a year.

I think overall more deaths in U.K. is due to being a very major travel hub, so seeded the pop more densely than most others; plus a weak to non existent flu season (which normally carries off 10-20K elderly frail folk) leaving us with more than usual older, more frail people?

Very few fatalities in the under 60s who don't have serious pre-existing conditions. I'd humbly suggest 50 & no known med conditions as the start point. That's ultra conservative. There is no zero risk stance. There wasn't last winter with 'flu nor will there be next.

So not only has Europe moved away from lockdown, they are now engaging in blame game over who thought of such a mentally ill ideal. At the same time, our gov't is doubling down on it. Who would have thought we'd be so far to the left of Europe one day?

It is correct to say that expert advice did not include 'lockdown'. Those who understand pandemics know that such 'leaky' lockdowns do not much if at all slow transmission yet definitely have seriously malign effects which can undermine the main aim of guidance.

Here are the regional trends for English hospital deaths by day-of-death.

As usual these use like-for-like 5-day reporting totals.

Main feature is London 5-day total in single figures for first time since March.

Something different happening with the London figures. Evidence that 40-60% of the population have underlying immunity to this virus- If this is true, could London have achieved some kind of herd immunity?

YES. Those saying "you need XX% for that to happen" are blind to the fact that, as population immunity grows, any level of such immunity slows transmission. We may be at a level where R is persistently <1. If so, it's over.

There has been nowhere on the globe where, after a large pandemic has waned, a 2nd peak has formed.
Rather than there being a second peak, weekly death rates in the vulnerable age groups is actually running far, far below normal numbers in some countries ahead of us, eg France.

It would be helpful to the general mood of the country if, instead of seizing every opportunity to get breathily excited & panicky, those who can interpret the data & have a public platform chose to be objective & use reasoning in their statements. It's probably too much to ask.

It's almost as if you're willing people to die en masse, so you can score political points. A revolting attitude.
If on the other hand, you're genuinely speculating with concern, allow me to reassure you.

There has been nowhere on the globe where, after a large pandemic has waned, a 2nd peak has formed.
Rather than there being a second peak, weekly death rates in the vulnerable age groups is actually running far, far below normal numbers in some countries ahead of us, eg France.

No, it is a great exaggeration. While most economic projections are for an inferior outlook than the status quo ante, none expect a recession one tenth as serious as the catastrophic impact of SARS-CoV-2.

There won't be a 2nd wave. You might think there will be, if your info is limited to MSM. Those of us who review what has happened / is happening elsewhere have a well-founded view that in U.K. we're in the last few % of this pandemic & that a 2nd wave is implausible.

Yes. It will be rolled into COVID-19. Conveniently. For the first time their is a huge split in voting intentions among demographics. It used to be people were broadly on the same page. That's not the case any more. This is a tinder box situation

What will be rolled into Covid19? If you mean "any impact of post-Brexit trade negotiations", do you have an alternative? Also, it's likely accommodations will be arrived at between the EU & this 3rd country. Both sides have fought a doughty battle & soon will come pragmatism.

And there are those on both sides that can't see the hurt in the other. Please accept that some people feel incredibly unrepresented and incredibly frightened about the future. We don't know what's going to happen so you can't say their fears won't come true. People are scared

If you mean re Covid19, I think that's entirely fair. I don't want to minimise that people feel frightened. After all, we've chosen a media full mostly with arts subjects and riven with nothing but politics. As a result, reporting on the pandemic have been scandalously dreadful.

Overall, no Qu, this has been the most serious public health policy error ever. I don't expect U.K. to acknowledge this, not surprising really. Because the risks were minuscule for healthy people under 60, lockdown was never required, always ineffective & also costly & dangerous.

This slide never gets old. When thinking about 'running a story', our media seem unaware that they are the most distrusted actors in the country. As consumers of this pile of pants, do remember that your sources are less trusted by the general public than are politicians!

It's not a trivial infection for those at risk. I can't be more explicit than that. However, those demonstrably not in the high risk categories do not need to go to great lengths to avoid it. There are other viruses in circulation at all times, some of which harm younger people.

I imagine the range of symptoms is wide. We know that a great majority of infected people have no symptoms or v minor ones. But others can feel & be extremely unwell & a v small percentage die.

That was truly excellent. I agree completely with your description of Mr Cummings. I too have been moved to hold all of our regular journalists in utter contempt. I've consumed Radio 4 & BBC1&2 for news & current affairs for 40y. Now I don't bother to listen to these thick liars.

Another reason not to drive though. It is better to be safe than sorry. My husband started with common flu symptoms a few weeks back, then he developed covid-19 symptoms which severely impaired his walking, he couldn't get to the car. You can't chance it, even with mild symptoms.

Very frightening. I hope he recovers fully in due course.
For my part, distance driving has become a mega chore in recent years since chronic neuropathic pain became my constant companion. I can chose pain or (on medication) risk dopiness & need frequent stops.

A few years ago my other half had a car crash which damaged the scar tissue left by cancer treatment, he has chronic pain with that too. He is on powerful prescription meds for it, and I fear that will now be worse for him because of this virus.

Anyone who becomes infected can infect others who are high risk. That is why testing is so important. To identify those infected and quarantine them so that they will not infect others.

Agreed. Numbers are low enough that it might be possible to contain & control. We should ensure we can do this. However, I'm not of the view that lockdown got us to low numbers. If I'm correct, the pandemic will continue its self-limiting path.

Young and middle-aged people, barely sick with COVID-19, are dying of strokes, according to the Washington Post. Every person who is not a hermit on some mountain-top should do all they can to avoid infection. Testing can help identify those infected and they can be quarantined

Easy to find the fittest, youngest, least already ill person who died after testing positive for the new virus.
Yet the stats are clear. For example, in U.K., the median age at death with Covid19 is 84 for female & 81 for male. Of the order of 30 people <40y out of 35K deaths.

Chronic pain is life destroying. I can't sleep for it. It's locus, a failed bladder neck, bloody aches almost all the time. Bladder emptying is poor & amplifies nocturnal pain. I'm at my happiest on a motorcycle but that's more & more rare, as safe conditions are uncommon.

My other half has to use a walking stick to support him. He is also a nurse. Sometimes it can be painful, but the meds help. He is on Pregabalin amongst others. He is lucky he can still drive. He cannot use bus though, because that is too painful for him.

The reason you fear that has nothing to do with viral dynamics of SARS-CoV-2 & rests wholly on the scummy, awful, clickbait 'mock science' reporting from this same bunch of ladies front bottoms who are playing elected politics without the common courtesy of standing for election.

The reason I feel is also based on the government science and the importance they are placing on their R number as well as other countries showing opening schools does cause outbreaks and also research in America linked to kowasaki disease

1. Denmark upon reopening schools adopted a highly precautionary principle in that, if anyone was concerned upon finding a person testing positive, they are willing to permit shutdown. That's quite different from outbreaks leading to deaths & a fierce fire-fight to regain..

Just listened to part of BBCR4 'World at One'.
The only story is Cummings. By coincidence, so it was for all three hours of the Today program.
At one point I thought tragically they'd lost their respective editors. How else can 4h on one item be explained? Then the penny dropped.

I guess this isn't true for every non-EU migrant?
Broadly, under what circs could a non-EU migrant find that they have no recourse to public funds for a decade or more? I would expect someone either be allowed to stay & be treated similarly to others, or else invited to leave.

Whilst I'm no Lib Dem fan, Davey's Bill here proposes an extension, not Stop Brexit. And I'm sure it'll be blocked, so nothing to worry about.

Democracy doesn't end at an election though and if that means questions are asked in the Commons, it's good for us all.

Not sure what you mean exactly. I don't have a problem with Davey still proposing pro-Europe policy, as he was also democratically elected himself as an MP on that ticket. It's up to the Commons to then debate it and vote accordingly. And given the Tory majority, it'll lose.

This is, I believe, why many political actors, both within Govt & across all opposition parties, plus an inglorious cabal of #ScumMedia are persisting in attacking the PM in any way they can, right now through Cummings. It'd make no difference if D.C. went. Might make it worse.

60mg is so low a dose that it cannot possibly do what's claimed for it. It's about 1% of the amount already in the body. Obv, if you have Zn deficiency through consuming too little, it will help. But over about 40mg is dangerous, as it competes for dietary uptake with copper.

You do know, & accept, that police & deputy CMO judged his exceptional circs to warrant his actions (bar Barnard Castle)?

Surely the main point was that he broke government guidance (guidence that he helped to draft); something which the Durham police report specifically excludes from comment. The addition of driving offence, putting his family & public at risk & lying only exacerbates it.

It seems he hadn't broken guidance. The best you're going to get is that his 'driving trial' might have been a minor infringement. The larger point of driving to self isolate was inside guidance, as many of us have maintained.

What does his autistic child have to do with him driving to Barnard Castle? Why did he edit his blog post to make it look like he warned people about Coronavirus?

Explicitly, the written guidance provides for 'exceptional circumstances' in relation to safeguarding vulnerable people, in this case, his SN son. Deputy CMO described such circs.

You worded the question wrong.
It should be:
Are you willing to cause more old & vulnerable people to get very sick and die by not following the lockdown rules?

Lockdown has saved not a single old persons life.
How have you not noticed that while we were locked down, most of the dead are in care homes (ironic name, surely?)
Lockdown never protects those already locked down.

You are sadly wrong. Care homes have patient in and out all the time for non covid reasons. Also agencies keep moving staff between care homes to save money.
Lockdown reduced number of carers with covid but not all.
EU said UK had 21% carehome deaths. Spain 65%, france 50%

Thanks. Crikey. Are you saying that, compared with Spain & France, we managed to protect care homes? If though it's true that lockdown was the cause of fewer care homes deaths than in Sp/Fr, didn't they also have lockdown? Why did theirs not protect? I remain a lockdown sceptic!

Sadly some in care homes weren't even sent to hospital or given oxygen, just left to die struggling to breathe.

Oxygen is available in care homes. A large proportion of older (ex or current) smokers will have COPD / emphysema & some will be permanently breathless just taking a wash, eventually even at rest. Ambulatory oxygen for some is a miracle cure. They can occasionally feel normal.

Those 90% saying they want the media stopped from attending obviously want to live in a dictatorship, ruled by a despot who shuts down questions to medical advisers and refuses to answer questions himself. If that is the society they want to live in they are insane.

Deaths could have been minimised by a hard lockdown two weeks earlier. The responses of South Korea & Germany make it impossible to argue that BoJo @10DowningStreet has done his best. The reality is that this government is responsible for tens of thousands of unnecessary deaths.

I disagree. Italy locked down early, when almost all deaths were in just 2 adjacent regions.
Regrettably we will never be sure & I accept you believe your post. It doesn't make it true. There is dispute in the scientific community on this issue. WHO didn't suggest lockdown.

Please take care especially in relation to flu this winter. Those in vulnerable groups are at higher risk if we have a bad flu season & one where vaccines are even less protective than usual. Also note the established role of children acting as flu vectors to older relatives.

Most car owners think they are above-average drivers. Sadly, this is statistically impossible. Similarly, not all opinions are equally valid. Epidemiologists' predictions of 40% more deaths per week delay in effective mitigation have been validated by 40k/100k deaths in UK/USA.

That's sad. Mine too. My mum died in a care home and it was well run.
But too many bad carehomes & agencies, the CQC really do need to step up a gear. It only takes a small proportion of 50k+ care homes to be bad to get a high death toll.

Also, do you believe the independent constabulary to be corrupt?

Pathetic response from the @BBC on this. Even more absurd that there is a direct link on their site to complain about the opening, but a questionnaire to complain about its removal. Subservient bollocks, @maitlis should move to somewhere prepared to tell the truth.

Some scientists are of the view that lockdown has been dangerously pointless as ineffective.

In our East Kent village we had a socially distanced VE celebration. The closest I got outside was to hold a ladder someone was up, nailing Union Jack bunting to bits of the houses.
Based on our & the adjacent village, I doubt there'd have been any significant transmission.

They could as easily & correctly asked “if a man, falling ill when his wife was already ill, had a special needs young son, and chose to self isolate in an outbuilding in a farm where family members would be nearby in an emergency, would that be an example to follow?”

If what Cummings did is accepted, if we do 'move on,' then an horrific precedent will be set. Anyone in politics who is deceitful, hypocritical, who has no regard for human life, who thinks the laws and the rules don't apply to them, will have a defence. The Cummings defence.

He has had his actions assessed by the police who decided his safeguarding trip to self isolate on a farm entirely within the exceptional circs part of written guidance, also outlined by deputy CMO. So you're wrong.

No. On the substance of the drag north, to self isolate on his dads farm in a separate dwelling, the cops & deputy CMO judged entirely right. On the trial drive, cops said they 'might' have advised him to turn back. No contact made with anyone. Less risky than your last shop.

Police say he breached law with trip to Barnard Castle. They only act on law, & Cummings has used loophole intended for domestic abuse situations to allow in law for London-Durham trip. We're also following Gov guidelines, devised & promoted by him. Gross misconduct = dismissal.

He had a responsibility to set a good example, he did not.

His actions have undermined the public health message, that is not going to go away.

When everyone is susceptible to a highly contagious virus, unless you act early and robustly to contain an epidemic (like NZ), there is no other way to break the chain of transmission.

Delay &/or weak actions increase death toll and makes test, track and trace almost impossible.

It'll make no diff to the totals infected, lockdown. At most it could flatten the peak & spread it out. Nowhere is there a claim for reduction in death from lockdown unless otherwise the health system might be overwhelmed (of course, first you have to believe lockdown works).

Their sole reason for breaches were completely selfish, to get their legover. DC's sojourn north was in order to self isolate on his dads farm while being easily reached if his child's welfare was in question. It's a deliberate act of stupidity to pretend he's done wrong.

I believe there are multiple scientific papers supporting the notion that many people infected with the new virus have no symptoms that would prompt then to think they even had a virus.

It looks like nobody who has left a comment here has even read what is being proposed.

Mainly, this is about cutting back on fossil fuel use and fighting global warming.

The world's poorest people are the ones who are suffering most from droughts, floods, and rising sea levels

Never done a "days proper graft"? I beg to differ. See last years score chart. QE2 did 230-240 engagements last year. She's been at this for over 75years, after driving London ambulances during the war. So I call your bitter post 'wantonly inaccurate'.

Has that research confirmed that an infectious bolus of virus necessary to initiate infection in the susceptible is in those smaller, more extensively travelled droplets? Small droplets carry very little mass & thus low numbers of viral particles (as compared with a sneeze blob).

Honestly, work it through & get it in perspective. The infection fatality rate is probably around 0.2%. So 1 in 500 cases might lead to one death, a few weeks later.
This implies that, just before lockdown started, 500,000 people were being infected EVERY day.

...in U.K. is around 1,800 people a day.
If the new infection rate of around a thousand per day, that's prob 2 extra deaths in that daily 1800 in a few weeks.
Not worth the human cost of the measures we're maintaining. That's killing dozens a day from missed medical intervention.

You have between you utterly broken what was once a globally important, late evening news & politics program, run seriously by people with balance.
It's now unwatchable. I've stopped tuning in after 35years.
BBC R4 is trying its darndest to flush itself down the pan as well.

Honestly, work it through & get it in perspective. The infection fatality rate is probably around 0.2%. So 1 in 500 cases might lead to one death, a few weeks later. This implies that, just before lockdown started, 500,000 people were being infected EVERY day.
Normal mortality..

Sadly, and I wish it wasn't so, but absolutely nothing is going to change. It's a very long play strategy to even begin to turn this around such that fewer police think it's ok to act in ways which might reasonably be expected to kill a fraction of those they do badly handle.

It's simply wrong, though, to tell lies. Ms Maitlis certainly told untruths, and as she's smart (I know she is), she couldn't but have known it. That makes it deliberate lying. I don't want her back in that role, not unless she acknowledges her error.

What happened after the global financial crisis was that the coalition inherited from Lab spending which >110% of national income. By the time of the last GE, spending was <103%.

There's a perfectly good case to be made for greater taxation on the wealthier cohorts & increases in spending in the poorer cohorts. Instead of being clear about what's wanted, Lab use a vague & inaccurate term, 'austerity'.

The vaccine should not be administered to anyone but at risk volunteers. Long term safety assessment will not be available & on the basis that most are not at risk from covid19, it's bluntly unethical even to consider giving it to healthy people under about 70.

All remaining restrictions must be lifted. Lockdown is the knee on the neck of the country. Please introduce balance to your reporting. The incidence now of infected is down to about 1 per thousand. You're most unlikely now ever to encounter an infected person in the community,

Hydroxychloraquine now proven to be ineffective, social distancing is a preventative measure recommended by medical and scientific advice to prevent spread of COVID-19

Obviously, you are only seeing and reading what the government want you to see and read , there is not one shred of evidence that any Social Distancing measures work and dont keep saying scientific advice - we all know thats what got us into this mess

Check WHO website: their scientists analysed measures which could be taken against pandemics. The only two which have evidence of any quality are (1) hand washing & (2) in a medical context only, the wearing of masks.
EVERYTHING else has been pulled from Govts lower abdomens.

This is what the man himself said.

> Speaking in the Downing Street rose garden today, Mr Cummings said: 'On Sunday 12th April, 15 days after I first displayed symptoms, I decided to return to work.
> 'My wife was very worried, particularly given my eyesight had seemed to have been affected by the disease.
> 'She's not one to risk a nearly 300-mile drive with our child given how ill I had been.

They shouldn't be using horses against people who are protesting. Someone will get badly hurt. Including the horse.

If they were protesting peacefully then no worries but they are not and you can quite clearly see that today in all videos and photo's, horses are used for crowd control and well you know

The excess deaths aren't different from excess deaths we experienced in 2018 & numerous other winters. The only differences in 2020 are (I) covid19 spares the young & infants; (ii) kids aren't key vectors to grandparents; (Ii) been more deaths, but not many more, than usual.

It likely that the direct unwanted effects of lockdown are now killing more people than it could possibly save. Let's be generous to lockdowners. Let's say only 20K people have or will die of non-covid19 causes secondary to lockdown. Are you willing to see yet more die? Foul.

Straw man argument.

Lockdown until R is well down (slightly <1 is not enough), then widespread testing and working track-trace as prerequisites for relaxation.

UK has gone from 6k/day new infections at peak to 2k/day now. It's progress, but not enough.

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · 1h

What's straw man? The continued reduction in infected people has happened in the face of part-lifted restrictions.
Also, with respect, we do not know what R is. We don't have enough data to know it. R is claimed to be decimally accurate at 0.9 here, 1.1 there. I'm v sceptical.

Why are the media reporting this in such a one-sided way? Many of these protestors are thugs. An officer has been seriously hurt. Bricks and bikes have been thrown at horses. You can't report on the protests and not discuss the fact that these people have clearly broken the law.

I cannot much longer bear the main media warning about a 2nd peak 'perhaps worse than the 1st'. It's flatly lying. No one immersed in the science believes there's any chance of that. It's biologically & mathematically implausible. Infections & deaths are declining everywhere....

We didn't "cope": large parts of the health system came to a halt to stop people dying in the short term from covid. We will see a long tail of secondary deaths from other conditions that went untreated.

We didn't know how bad the first wave would get so the move was appropriate.

6 119 553

Tom Dolphin WASH YOUR HANDS @thomasdolphin · Jun 1

But restarting the rest of the NHS safely is going to be difficult, especially while the virus is circulating in the community.

If we have another wave in the meantime, that means more elective care deferred while we fight fires, and more deaths from other conditions later on.

1 77 430

Tom Dolphin WASH YOUR HANDS @thomasdolphin · Jun 1

Meanwhile after months on extremely harsh rotas, doing difficult and often unfamiliar work in stifling PPE, staff are flagging. The initial adrenaline is fading, but the slog continues as we try to restart elective work, with one eye anxiously watching the R0 creeping up.

One comment on your otherwise excellent posts. We don't know what R is, accurately, anywhere. It's mostly an output from a model & is post hoc. I'd go as far as to say it's a number more closely approximating politics than science.

How has it been decided that this is a racist attack? The happening, if it involves mostly or only white children, is unique. White children don't drown classmates. They can be horrid in lots of ways, but murder isn't among them.

You're currently not told if the meat you're buying to cook (or in prepared meals) was obtained through Halah procedures. Like chlorine washed chicken, it's a yuck factor issue, not a safety issue. It's also a duty of candour issue, for me.

Infection & death rates have fallen relentlessly everywhere once the peak was passed (U.K. peak: Apr 11th), regardless of precautions & compliance levels. Lockdown in most places post dated the peak, certainly true in U.K.
Therefore, lockdown CANNOT be the key inhibitory factor.

Hi. Various organisations, including Unicef, say that there is no difference if you use cold or hot water to wash your hands. Even our brilliant NHS have no preference over hot or cold water, as long as you use soap and wash your hands for more than 20 seconds.

Hi Tracey. Various organisations, including Unicef, say that there is no difference if you use cold or hot water to wash your hands. Even our brilliant NHS have no preference over hot or cold water, as long as you use soap and wash your hands for more than 20 seconds.

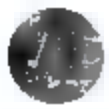
1. The Guardian isn't reputable but laughable.
2. Their story says some girls had been at least unpleasant to the girl who later died. That's bad, but it's not criminal.
3. There's nothing in their piece that contradicts accidental drowning.



Everyone is a lying racist, perhaps?

RACIST BRITAIN?

In 1833, Britain used 40% of its national budget to buy freedom for all slaves in the Empire. Britain borrowed such a large sum of money for the Slavery Abolition Act that it wasn't paid off until 2015. This means that living British citizens helped Accordingly to uncontested history, Mohammed was himself a slave owner & slave trader. He also had sex with girls well under any modern age of consent. However, in his context, I understand these things were unremarkable. It's not these characteristics that make him The Prophet.

Example of the CIA toppling a foreign government for elite bankers & chaos that follows.

Under Guddafi Libya had free healthcare, education,& electricity

Newly weds & newborns recieved cash grants

Banks gave interest free loans...

But he wanted a gold backed national currency

Odd clarification'. Under duress, the scientist was forced to mention that some models incorporate an ASSUMPTION of significant transmission. That tells us that those models are incorrect. She mentioned unpublished studies, but then failed to cite a single observation from them.

Kelsey @kelzho · 22m

She definitely does not put much stock in the model or she would have mentioned it previously..all of these models have been based on assumptions. R-naught assumptions, zero mitigation assumptions, zero pharmaceutical intervention assumptions, assumptions, assumptions.

Agreed. In all walks of life, there is a demand for knowledge of the future. Modellers make inappropriately strong claims for the ability of their models to meet that need, often dangerously inaccurately, mostly due to invalidated assumptions.

Warm water is better. But it's also axiomatic that, provided the detergent emulsified in cold water, which they're designed to, this will equally well remove the bugs, taking slightly longer to reach a threshold value. I'm a career life scientist in biology. List your counters.

However, adverse effects of lockdown have led directly to 20,000 avoidable non covid19 deaths. This is the most disastrous public health policy decision in history. Admit it & move forward. No need for social distancing, masks or a massed vaccination campaign. #RestarttheNHS

Did you hear the obvious LIE on BBC 10 o'clock news last night? (1) they told us that random sampling shows that the prevalence of active infection is down to 1:1700, down from 1:1000 as recently as a week ago. That sounds legit. (2) a sonorous item on R around the country....

Same number range as a month ago, 0.7-0.9. Horrors, it is, they implausibly claimed, 1.0 in the southwest. Any R close to 1 means very slow decline in incidence. But they just told us it's almost halved in 7 days, probably would have a 'half life' of around 10 days.

It is clear that lockdown made no difference to the timecourse of the pandemic. Peak of infections unquestionably preceded lockdown. Thus other factors led to steady reductions in R. Timecourses in U.K. & Sweden are identical, corrected for population. Lockdown saved no one.

I'm of the firm view that, in countries which have been heavily infected (by which I mean France, U.K., Spain & Belgium) no special measures are required in order to reopen their economies. This is because the vast majority of those susceptible to the virus have already had it.

No, not acceptable. But equally, spare us the moral relativism. U.K. doesn't deserve a particular call out on colonialism. Sure, we had a bigger empire, but just murdering the people of a couple of countries isn't a superior position over those doing it in many more countries.

Yes, agreed, provided you mean 'vaccinate those at appreciably elevated risk'. Not everyone. It's important to note that drug safety relative to benefits falls the more inclusive you are with vaccination. Put simply, someone not at risk gets no benefits but assumes the same risk.

First of all how is it moral relativism to call out literal genocide? Second, there's a reason U.K. colonialism is getting more of a callout because like you said: they were the bigger empire. Why is it hard to understand why people are disgusted and want it to be talked about?

It's moral relativism to be very concerned about the British empire while giving eg. analogous French colonies the same treatment. French Indochina was particularly ghastly & they weren't too clever in Africa, either.

You can expect elements of the Left which are protective over their "white privilege" narratives, to react negatively to this.

But in terms of cultural, social and economic capital, white working-class boys, especially in coastal areas, are struggling no end.

The PM is spending £900k of taxpayers' money to paint his official plane in Union flag colours "to better represent the UK around the world". It's currently a dreary military grey. Money well spent?

The one thing I'm sure of, Bob, is that it's no more your business than anyone else's. Unless you're planning to be a game show host, I'd give up on this sort of trivia, and ask something important, there's a love.

This is the one. I'm sure it was headline news for several days, each time we signed an updated version with greater scope. Oh wait. It wasn't. Astonishingly, this has NEVER been headline news. Why not?

I agree, but if all U.K. Govts will just comply, because it suits them to, the question of being bound to comply or not is moot. And they are just complying. That's the explanation for the dissonance between words & deeds, between manifesto direction & the real thing.

The British monarchy, specifically the Queen herself, is possibly the most approved of institution in U.K.
The Queen's net approval ratings are without peer. Imo we'd be much weakened without her.

Queen Elizabeth isn't German. She isn't German enough to play football for Germany. Her father George VI was British, born in England. Her GG Grandmother Queen Victoria was British, born in Britain.

You seem upset that others have understood the dynamics of this, which are not terribly complicated. I'm sorry you feel confused. Seriously, continuing IFR estimates & nos of deaths gets you close to 100% of the susceptible pop. Infection inevitably slows, then stops. That's it.

Whereas you haven't made any positive contribution to the thread at all. In fact you only seem to know how to respond negatively. So Patrick Vallance shouldn't be giving an opinion on anything because this is out of his field too? Is he a self appointed expert?

I've not put myself forward in this debate at all. I'm definitely not interested either. Life's complicated enough.
But one doesn't stop using the scientific method at any time when dealing with certain problems & god knows we've all had time enough to think & read extensively.

Molecular virology, passable knowledge: small genomes, v low nos of highly specific genes, error prone copying & sequence drift. There's a tripartite team, partly in U.K., which monitors evolution. So far SARS-Cov-2 is proceeding to hoped-for form based on other coronaviruses.

You'll probably disagree with me on this but due to my adverse reaction to most drugs, I use home remedies. I have a little osteo arthritis but my health is generally very good. My blood pressure rises if stressed so I eat beetroot which brings it down very quickly.

So all his expertise does is possibly help with the respiratory part, except actual experts are already doing that and also find a steroid works particularly well for those on a respirator.

The inhalation route for infection is surprisingly uncommon for viruses. That is to say, evidence is slim to none that inhaling virus is an important way to get infected. It's mostly a mass transfer problem. Small particles are respirable. But small particles carry v little mass.

The fact that he states viruses aren't spread via respiratory mechanisms speaks against this theory that he knows what he's talking about....

Allow me to correct you. I stated that thus far I'd seen no evidence that SARS-CoV-2 utilises the inhalation route as a prime mechanism for transmission. If you've seen evidence, do share.
But don't extrapolate to other viruses or, if you do, be clear it's your extrapolation.

Often, researchers have identified viral RNA in air samples but to date "None of the air samples was infectious in cell culture".
I do understand the belief that "it must be by aerosol, it's respiratory" & that would have been my default view also, but for all the neg results.

Nb: I notice the highest viral loads are in sputum, essentially spit. You don't exhale sputum, but spatter in on nearby objects, this being termed 'fomites'.

Absolutely FALSE- and you should know this. Droplet transmission has been shown to be the main source from the beginning- unless you're suggesting a world orgy, millions rolling in feces, or every person eating and drinking the exact same thing? Explain how it circled the globe

Droplets, sure. Not respirable.
His the dickens did you imagine virus leaving an infected person?
No, my point is simple: that it is not by inhaling droplets / mists / particles that people get infected, but by other routes, most likely hand to deposited droplets then to face.

I have commented that a future vaccine against SARS-CoV-2, like all med treatments, need an extensive safety database. This includes safety & efficacy, fit example, a year out. I simply point out you can't have DROPLET mode has been CONFIRMED - hence masks. This is complete respiratory transmission, and should not be excused as "not airborne"- you KNOW it is spread through coughing, sneezing, talking and basically breathing. Yet you are set on arguing a point lost in many.

transmission is by droplets, which are generated during coughing, talking, or sneezing and are then inhaled by a healthy individual. They can also be indirectly transmitted by a person when they land on surfaces that are touched by a healthy individual who may then touch their nose, mouth, or eyes, allowing the virus entry into the body. Fomites are also a common issue in such diseases [43].

Aerosol-based transmission of the virus has not yet been confirmed [44]. Stool-based transmission via the fecal-oral route may also be possible since the SARS-CoV-2 has been found in patient feces [44, 45]. Some patients with COVID-19 tend to develop diarrhea, which can become a major route of transmission if proper disease is spread by droplet transmission. As of April 2020, the total number of infected individuals stands at around 3 million, with ~200,000 deaths and more than 1 million recoveries globally [36, 44]. The virus thus has a fatality rate of around 2% and an R_0 of 3 based on current data. However, a more recent report from the CDC, Atlanta, USA, claims that the R_0 could be as high as 5.7 [13]. It has also been observed from data available from China and India that individuals likely to be infected by the virus from both these countries belong to the age groups of 20–50 years [36, 37]. In both of these countries, the working class mostly belongs to this age group, making exposure more likely. Germany and Singapore are great examples of

Since early reports revealed that a new coronavirus was spreading rapidly between people, researchers have been trying to pin down whether it can travel through the air. Health officials say the virus is transported only through droplets that are coughed or sneezed out – either directly, or on objects. But some scientists say there is preliminary evidence that airborne transmission – in which the disease spreads in the much smaller particles from exhaled air, known as aerosols – is occurring, and that precautions, such as increasing ventilation indoors, should be recommended to reduce the risk of infection.

In a scientific brief posted to its website on 27 March, the World Health Organization said that there is not sufficient evidence to suggest that SARS-CoV-2 is airborne, except in a handful of medical contexts, such as when intubating an infected patient.

But experts that work on airborne respiratory illnesses and aerosols say that gathering unequivocal evidence for airborne transmission could take years and cost lives. We shouldn't "let perfect be the enemy of convincing", says Michael

The person at risk of infection gets it 'primarily via contact routes' (surfaces / hands / face). NOT by 'inhaling infected particles'.
Do we agree the evidence says this?

Hopefully the fact that we've built a decent level of immunity in the population will help us to control it better than Germany. For Germany, this is still very much a deadly novel virus.

The whole issue re herd immunity - they say 60% immunity needed. But if other mechanisms are at play - so for example, if the virus can't bind properly to 70% of the population, we could well be there with 10% immune.

If herd immunity isn't possible the weak will be culled. That's the harsh reality. What do we achieve by making prisoners of everyone and trashing the economy. For the vast majority the virus is harmless. 70% have zero symptoms.

What many are failing to see is that for EVERY person that dies, it is that much harder for those who are left as less tax will be collected ie every single person pays tax in one form or another. Local lock down as opposed to National lock down is imo the way forward.

The population will be larger after the pandemic than before it arrived.
The riddle is solved by appreciating just how large net population growth (births plus immigration minus emigration) is over the death rate. Another net change is slightly to lower the age profile of U.K.

I have nothing but respect for HCWs who ran towards danger. At first, we did not know what risks they faced. That said, I'm not convinced lockdown saved anyone, because peak infection preceded it. This means something else turned R to below 1, pre-lockdown.

harder for those who are left as less tax will be collected ie every single person pays tax in one form or another. Local lock down as opposed to National lock down is imo the way forward.

The population will be larger after the pandemic than before it arrived.
The riddle is solved by appreciating just how large net population growth (births plus immigration minus emigration) is over the death rate. Another net change is slightly to lower the age profile of U.K.

The shocker in the data was just how early we were getting infected at pace, thousands a day in Feb (& probably earlier). Probably the only intervention which might have helped was total border & airport closures from early Jan onwards. We'd still be in that state now, if we had.

If there's no vaccine for a couple of years from when this first started, then it was inevitable everyone would get it. If you locked down for a year (trashing economy) virus would still be lurking. Initial mitigation approach was the right one - gradually build immunity.

Pathetic. There won't even be a vaccine, just like there wasn't for earlier SARS, MERS, etc. The 'movie script' will ensure there's no interest in progressing this vaccine either. As before, once it's no longer a pressing issue for politicians, they'll renege on their promises.

However, David Noakes is currently in a French jail, extradited from the U.K. for simply creating a drug that treated cancer.

The pharmaceuticals were not having that.

As it is literally technically impossible for one person to create a new drug these days, nor has it been possible for decades, so complex is the process, that you can be assured that you've been had.

If Trump had donned a mask early in the pandemic, ordered his White House staff to do the same, pressured GOPers and his supporters at every level to do the same, that alone would have saved thousands of lives.

I agree with you, having also read what scientific studies there are in the subject. Essentially, wearing a mask is a social act. It won't protect the wearer much if at all, because inhaling virus isn't the main route of infection (probably oral, ie hands contaminated to face).

4.1% of the cost of imported goods. So a pair of shoes normally retailing at the Euro equivalent price of £200 would then cost £208.20. That difference might be borne by all actors in the chain such that the consumer is unlikely to be put off a purchase they'd make without WTO.

Guy, the decision to leave isn't about money. You know that. So why keep returning to the only factor that's unpersuasive? Why not try addressing some of the underlying reasons? Perhaps you can't & that's why it's always money.

50000 new staff just for border admin plus additional cost of admin in companies. There you go, thats about the same as current net budget contribution. And that doesn't even include Northern Ireland UK border or tariffs or the effect on supply chains or losing fin passport

A public service cost, as you know, will mostly recycle back uni the U.K. economy. However, money spent purchasing imports is a loss of sovereign currency purchasing power. Therefore the two situations you've compared are in fact not comparable.

I'd value someone qualified in statistics looking at this & reassure me this is as expected.
Take any 3 digit number, add the words 'new cases' & enter it into Google.
Check the headline. Do it again with different nos.
Does this look normal to you?
I don't know what to think.

Jonny @jonnymarshall3 · 4h
I'm certainly not qualified, but I don't find it particularly strange. It is the biggest news story in at least 10 years, so every day news outlets all over the world report cases. They are legit news articles, I don't think there's much to read into it.

Thanks. Yes, I was musing on how many papers there are. Every one of them will report on number of new cases, perhaps more than once. It's no distance to most real numbers up to three figures being covered. It's probably one of those surprising things that shouldn't be.

For the vast majority of people, Covid-19 results in mild symptoms or no symptoms at all. With a very tiny number of exceptions, it is a threat only to the elderly or those with other medical conditions. I cannot therefore see any compelling case for keeping schools closed.

Idiotic. First, there is not a consensus on these matters among epidemiologists and, second, no-one should demand ordinary members of the public abandon their own critical faculties when considering such questions.

107 countries have implemented national school closures, but I'm sure you know better. Modelling studies do support the use of school closures as part of a package of social distancing measures. It's marginal, but it helps. And with at least 43,000, every measure helps control.

I regret to tell you that the models are all wrong, but some are useful. The school closure part simply doesn't fly. Very cautious countries which were also thoughtful didn't do so or closed them only briefly.

Please let me have the total deaths linked to Covid19. We can use the CDC IFR of 0.26% to calculate how many people must have been infected to cause that many deaths. I also need the total population. It's possible to compute a range of estimates for % susceptible remaining.

I've made this calculation for U.K. & separately for NYC. Both could have % populations susceptible as low as 17%, which is way into herd immunity territory.
Lots of errors being made, for example, accepting the wrong assumption that no antibodies = not infected.

So, an average of 18 payments a year. Payments do not comprise proof, merely that it was possible & so a payment resulted. Meanwhile in those 50 years, how many hundreds of millions were protected? Surely there's a balance to be struck? Anyway, don't vomit on me. I'll ignore it.

So what was the issue with Jews for the previous 2500 years?

SaveTheNHS @SaveTheNHS4U · 6h
There was none mentioned in that tweet, or ever by people on the left.

Only people like you and @freedland, @Keir_Starmer and @guardian make the link between Israeli government actions and all Jews.

This link you all make is antisemitic according to the IHRA code.

(((Emily Banks))) @Ejsbanks · 5h
Anyone who tries to pretend that Israel and Jews aren't linked understands nothing about what being a Jew is and about the persecution and murder we have endured due to not having a homeland or a safe space.

However, once the electorate got more informed & thinking about the long view, that lead melted away. No reason not to expect the same again. Not that there'll be another vote.

Surely that's ok, if the peoples of the island of Ireland want that, it's a fantastic result. It's not what I want, but I'm approving of it, if such a reunification campaign won a clear, absolute majority for it.
Your attitude sounds a bit stone-aged loser.

However, once the electorate got more informed & thinking about the long view, that lead melted away. No reason not to expect the same again. Not that there'll be another vote.

AC Grayling goes on about rejoining the EU. Why would he want to join a racist, discriminatory organisation?
Just 24 of 705 MEPs are people of colour, despite approx 50 million estimated to be living in Europe.
Only 12 of the 27 EU member states elected a single BAME MEP. Awful.

The population of EU27 is approx 11% BAME.
U.K. elected a higher ratio of BAME MEPs than any other member state.
BBC tells us we're irredeemably racist.

They can use GBP if they wish, as impoverished Central American states are "dollarised".
Like those poor economies though, Scotland couldn't issue sovereign debt in the currency of another country. Their central bank also couldn't issue GBP.
Theyd do better with the New Groat.

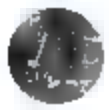
Let me also make the point that slavery in Africa in large part had many key differences, because it wasn't the bedrock of many economies.

It was still slavery nonetheless.



Slavery in places like the US for instance, was an ENTIRELY different beast altogether.

What about modern slavery, shouldn't we be concerned about those that are living today as slaves than those that lived 200 years ago. What about the child slaves mining cobalt in the Congo so we can have smartphones. Is it because the slavers are not white that it's being ignored

You can lock down forever on that basis. The virus will always be inside someone. Even if there is a vaccine, there'll be unprotected people. It's always a question of degree - not absolutes, as you appear to be suggesting. Also, the vulnerable can shield as they're doing anyway.

These human rights violations would only intensify after annexation. What would be left of the West Bank would be a Palestinian Bantustan, islands of disconnected land completely surrounded by Israel and with no territorial connection to the outside world. Israel has recently promised that it will maintain permanent security control between the Mediterranean and the Jordan River. Thus, the morning after annexation would be the crystallisation of an already unjust reality: two peoples living in the same space, ruled by the same state, but with profoundly unequal rights. This is a vision of a 21st century apartheid.

More than 40 Jewish groups around the world in 2018 opposed "cynical and false accusations of antisemitism that dangerously conflate anti-Jewish racism with opposition to Israel's policies and system of occupation and apartheid". jewishvoiceforpeace.org/first-ever-40-…

The stander may also be in sympathy with the underlying cause pursued by BLM. You can't tell from the picture. In any case, she's decided that respect for tradition & her national anthem calls for her to stand respectfully. I admire her choice.

You do know, don't you, that no one knows what the best way out of this pandemic is? Please remove the childlike assumption that the executive is guiding us rationally. In many ways so far, they most definitely have done anything but that.

Our village primary school now has a grand total of zero male staff, in any capacity. It's a bloody important job, teaching, and that's a true statement from nursery reception all the way out to post-doctoral studies. It cannot be good for our nation to only use half our talent.

I'm sure that with clearer, more consistent messaging, better PPE, better planning regarding care homes, earlier testing, an actual test and trace program with a working app and ministers and advisors leading by example - less people would have died.

Im not sure even that would have made much difference. Most people have no conception how easily a virus as infectious as this is slips around our usual precautions. At its height, half a million people were newly infected in U.K. every single day. Astonishing isn't it?

You're wrong. As a result of the death toll & widespread distribution of the virus across the U.K., our consolation prize is that our population is approaching herd immunity. There will be small, local flare ups. That's unavoidable & preventing all of them isn't even desirable.

French fishing under threat after Brexit

Our fishermen have been subject to EU rules and regs for years to the detriment of our fishing industry. The French weren't asked to make any concessions for us. We're not a bloody charity. We need to look after ourselves and our economy. It's up to France to sort theirs.

If you lockdown and actually close things, then you prevent large groups getting together. Why do you think the number of deaths per day has dramatically decreased since lockdown?

The answer has nothing to do with lockdown. Peak infection occurred prior to lockdown & has been falling relentlessly ever since.

I'm as certain as it's possible to be, having inspected all public data, it wouldn't have made much difference.
We now know from detailed molecular virology studies the major sources & timings of arrival of the virus. If we'd closed airports before anyone 'locked down', maybe.

There are now too few susceptible people for U.K. to now experience a second wave. It doesn't matter how we release lockdown. Have a street party. It'll make little to no difference now. Nb: such has already happened; made no difference. Powerful evidence for my interpretation.

Keir Starmer taking the knee for BLM and now claiming he didn't really know what they stood for means he's either lying or is very very stupid.

If you lockdown and actually close things, then you prevent large groups getting together. Why do you think the number of deaths per day has dramatically decreased since lockdown?

The answer has nothing to do with lockdown. Peak infection occurred prior to lockdown & has been falling relentlessly ever since.

Lockdown has had no effect on transmission because most of the transmission has been in care homes & healthcare system. No criticism intended. Lots of infectious diseases are nosocomial. You believe what you like, but that doesn't make it so.

It's even worse than you think. Lockdown was never recommended by SAGE & doing it was solely a political act, which helped no one but indirectly led to perhaps 20,000 avoidable deaths from non-Covid19 causes. They allowed the media & Ferguson to scare them into stupid acts.

Furthermore, SAGE never once discussed lockdown, considering it ineffective & very harmful. I've read the SAGE minutes. Have you? Going to repeat your claim, in the face of direct evidence to the contrary? That'd be dumb.

No, the rate of infection is of no relevance, if you would inform yourself. Infections do not equal disease/sickness/symptoms nor do they mean hospitalisations. More tests will result in more positive cases, nor are the tests 100% reliable.

The man is an idiot. I tried to like him for, in many ways, he's right. But the utter daft ness about killing people in purpose. A quick look at births + immigration vs deaths + emigration confirms our population is bigger at the end of the pandemic than before it.

The rate of infection is the issue.

If 100 people anywhere else in the UK were to be tested, 2 would test positive. In Leicester, that figure is 10. Action is regrettable but necessary to keep people in Leicester safe.

The ultimate irony is people complaining "this shit Govt locked down too late" (that's why we've had so many deaths..).
It's ironic, because SAGE never discussed, let alone recommended, lockdown. Govt did it all by itself, as a political act. And this saved no one & killed many.

No it won't. C19 has only killed 350k globally. Most countries have no lockdown and the 3rd world does not have healthcare. In the U.K. the median age of fatalities is 82 and 97% were fucked already with COPD, diabetes, heart disease or cancer. Get a grip. You're being played.
